Wells County ranked as N.D.'s healthiest

by Jennifer Willis

The results are in, Wells County is the healthiest county in the state according to the 2019 County Health Rankings and Roadmaps (CHR&R) report. The report, produced by the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation and the University of Wisconsin Population Health Institute, ranked the health of almost every county in the United States.

The study focused on factors such as length and quality of life, clinical care, social and economic factors, health behaviors and physical environment. Wells county areas of strength included zero percent alcohol-impaired driving deaths, the ratio of 1,010 residents per dentist, the percentage of mammography screenings among residents (48 percent) and 73 percent of residents having at least some college education. Other factors included only 12 percent of children living in poverty while 11 percent of the children in the county live in single-parent households. The report found that 41.5 percent of the county's residents participate in social associations.

The air pollution measured 5.1 micrograms of particulate matter per cubic meter compared to 6.1 micrograms among the other top performers in the country. Severe housing problems affected six percent of residents, compared to eleven percent of other North Dakota counties and nine percent of the top performers. The number of those who drive to work alone was also evaluated, in Wells county 71 percent of the residents do so, well below the 81 percent average in the remainder physicians to residents, the number of preventable hospital stays, and the unemployment rate of 3.2 percent compared to an average of 2.6 percent in North Dakota and 2.9 percent among the other top performers.

The report found that secure, affordable housing is the key to living healthy in the United States. The cost of housing for 11 percent of the households in the country was over 50 percent of total income with low income renters experiencing the most severe housing cost burden. It was found that these severe housing cost burdens not only affect health but are barriers to longevity, are associated with food insecurity and child poverty.

Beth Huseth, Community Administrative Assistant for St. Aloisius Medical Center, credits the collaboration between the numerous agencies in the county, deemed the Interagency, for the well-being of the residents. The Interagency has been in existence for over 20 years. Comprised of the hospital, social services, district health and several other agencies and associations, the groups all work together focusing on the needs of Wells county residents and addressing issues that affect healthy living in the area.

affect healthy living in the area. Joye Stolz, of Wells County District Health Unit, said, "There are multiple partners such as Wells County District Health, the hospital, the job development authorities, the cities, and the county commissioners that work really hard to make Wells County a great and healthy place to live. We have set in place the framework for health that will happen when people take advantage of all Wells County has to offer."

Sixth graders help senior center

Dockter's students choose a community project

by Kathy Kennedy

Every new school year brings a new community project for Bret Dockter's class at B. M. Hanson Elementary School. This year was no exception for the 2018-2019 sixth grade.

Last spring, Dockter talked to the fifth grade class and told them to consider over the summer what community project they would want to put their efforts toward when they came back in the fall as sixth graders. Almost unanimously, the students voted to help the senior citizen center in Harvey, which is managed under the Wells/Sheridan County Aging Council.

One of the first considerations of the students was a slogan for their project. This year it is, "We've Found a Way to Keep our Seniors at Play." This slogan is used in conjunction with their fundraisers and printed on T-shirts and sweatshirts that the students sell. The apparel, which is sponsored by businesses, has a design that was created and drawn by Kayl Sieg and Aiden Hager.

For fundraising, they have kept up some of the projects that have been successful in previous years. Currently, there is a "penny war" going on between the classes. Students are bringing in change which is counted each week and amounts are posted on the wall by the elementary school's multi-purpose room.

In October, they were studying about heterogeneous mixes in science. So, for Halloween they put together heterogeneous snack mixes and sold them at school. Before the Christmas break, they sold floats with the theme of 'Float into Christmas' and sponsored a dodge ball tournament. Although the tournament was a repeat, they amped it up this year by having lights off, music playing, and official announcers that introduced the players. Relay races were incorporated for the

The last two years, students have designed a calendar to sell. Two years ago, it featured firemen and last year it featured B. M. Hanson Elementary staff. The 2019 calendar has pictures of businesses that have helped sponsor their projects and allowed them to put collection cans on their counters. The calendars may be purchased at Hinrichs Super Valu as they are scheduled.

The goal of the class is to raise $8,000 to donate to the senior center. Dockter said their total is currently about $5,000 after the Eagles Auxiliary donated all the proceeds made from the Father/ Daughter Dance that was held in February.

The students hope to have the money put to use to give the center a facelift but the use of the funds will ultimately be determined by the Wells/Sheridan and helping."

On February 20, they visited the center to interview workers, board members and patrons. They gathered information about the center's past, present, future and the people who are involved with its operation.

This information will be used to compile presentations that will be given to various school classes and will be open to the public. If they can determine how to move the necessary technology, they will present at the senior center, as well. For now, fundraising is on hold as they plan, organize, write and present their presentations. Once finished with those, they will be in full swing again as they plan for the 2019 B. M. Hanson Idol, an annual singing competition, that is set for Friday, May 17.

While there were many positives to living in Wells county, there are areas for improvement. The study recommends that officials research such areas as the 14 percent of adults in the county that are smokers, the 32 percent of adults that are obese, the 28 percent of residents that lack physical activity, the ratio of primary care and Service Drug in Harvey.

In February, something that hadn't been done before was a Snow Day. Sixth graders paired with classes and played/supervised games in the gym, played board games, and organized a scavenger hunt. Concessions such as popcorn, candy and sno-cones were sold. They plan to sell concessions at volleyball games that are held at the elementary school County Aging Council.

In addition to raising money to help senior citizens, the students have donated time and service. They were on hand at the senior center's Christmas party to call Bingo, help with clean up, and dishwashing. In February, they helped serve supper. Dockter said, "They worked like crazy. It was fun to see them interacting

by Kathy Kennedy

Mark Friedt, of Harvey, a Rural Market President for First International Bank & Trust, was recently honored with a most prestigious award. The Odin Award is named after their founder, Odin Stenehjem, who opened their first bank in 1910. This award is presented to those who best exemplify First International Bank & Trust's mission, vision and values.

Friedt said, "First International Bank & Trust promotes community service very strongly. It is an important part of management." One of the reasons cited for bestowing this award on Friedt stated, "Mark is an active member of the community of Harvey, ND, volunteering for the Boy Scouts of America, and taking on fundraising efforts to improve the parks and recreation facilities." Friedt believes that refers to his efforts to raise funds for the local food pantry, renovation of the grand stands, and the construction of a new concession stand at the ballpark.

The announcement of his award was made at the bank's first quarterly celebration after the new year over a teleconference which covered all the offices throughout the state. Twenty-five local employees were gathered in Harvey when it was announced that Friedt was the designated winner of the Odin Award.

Friedt remarked, "I'm not speechless very often, but at that moment, I was. It was a very humbling experience."

He went on to clarify that he doesn't feel this was a solo award. He credited his employees for making it possible for him to be involved in these community activities. He feels it is a joint award because they are working and covering duties for him while he is out working in the community. He said, "I work with the best employees in the organization."

It was through the efforts of some of his employees nominating him, completing paperwork, and giving references that led to his consideration for the award.

One of his peers wrote, "Mark has the ability to wear multiple hats in the same day. He cares. He's empathetic when he needs to be. He does not demand respect, but earns your respect. He allows his staff the freedom to do their job."

Along with the honor of being the seventh recipient of the Odin Award and the first recipient in the Rural Region, Friedt was given a $5,000 monetary allowance to be donated to a nonprofit organization. He said it was easy for him to decide that The Penny House, a youth center in Harvey, should benefit from his good fortune.

He said, "The Penny House is a great thing for our local youth. It is nice for the kids to have somewhere to go after school if they have to wait for their parents to get off work. They can do homework, get a snack, or just blow off some steam playing games after a day at school in a safe, drug-free/ alcohol-free environment." He has nothing but admiration for the youth who serve on The Penny House Board who give of their time and effort to open the center every day after school and supervise until 8:30 each weekday evening.

He knows that one of the goals for The Penny House is to put in a solid, insulated north wall to replace the large panels of glass that presently make that wall. A lot of funds are being used to keep the place heated.

Friedt said he is happy that The Penny House can benefit from his receiving the award and that this will get them closer to being able to "Build that wall!"

F-B School presents The Secret Garden

Working to build their fine arts program

by Anne Ehni

Fessenden-Bowdon students and staff performed a musical production of The Secret Garden last week. Their many hours of practice was rewarded by two stellar performances on Monday, March 24.

Fessenden-Bowdon music teacher Mark Reeves directed the performance. He was assisted by Kristen Allmaras.

Reeves said that he wanted to bring a musical that would challenge cast members to strive for a high degree of artistry, as well as help them gain the theatrical knowledge base required for any aspiring actor or actress.

"Our greatest enemy was time and the weather. Most of our students are involved in multiple extracurricular activities at any given time," Reeves said. The performance required a high level of commitment from everyone involved. "I knew it would be a pretty steep learning curve for the cast, and sacrifices would have to be made. I'm happy to say our cast rose to the occasion." Reeves said.

Reeves is grateful for the community support as the school is working to built their fine arts program.

In addition to the directors and cast, many others helped with the success of the production. Anna Copenhaver was the stage manager and she was assisted by Gavin Austin as stage hand. Jon Couch helped oversee set up, sets, and technology. Dave Park was technical assistant. Fred Weidrich was stage hand and assisted with sets. Jamestown Art center loaned the set to the school and the costumes were provided by the University of Jamestown Fine Arts Department.

Many still undercook meat. Undercooking is a safety issue.

So, I need to ask my readers a couple of questions: Where is your food thermometer? When was the last time you used it?

If you don't have a food thermometer, you need to get one. I make this recommendation based on what I heard from research scientists, regulators and educators at the national food safety conference.

According to the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) and Food and Drug Administration, only about one out of three people uses a food thermometer when cooking hamburgers.

Using a food thermometer doesn't mean that you are cooking food to a blackened, rubbery state. Food thermometers ensure safety and quality. Here are the temperature rules from the USDA:

Hamburgers, sausages and other ground meats should reach 160 F.

All poultry should reach a minimum of 165 F.

Whole cuts of pork, lamb, veal and beef should be cooked to 145 F, as measured by a food thermometer placed in the thickest part of the meat, and allowed to rest for three minutes before eating. A "rest time" is the amount of time the product remains at the final temperature after it has been removed from a grill, oven or other heat source. During the three minutes after meat is removed from the heat source, its temperature remains constant or continues to rise, which destroys pathogens.

Cook fish to 145 F.

Meat and poultry cooked on a grill often browns very fast on the outside. By using a food thermometer, you can be sure items have reached a safe minimum internal temperature needed to destroy any harmful bacteria that may be present.

Not Socialism but a national community ist nation," prophesied President Trump in his February 5 State of the Union Address. He may have been wrong about some things in the past but this time he is absolutely right.

Communism will never work anywhere in the world as long as human beings are human beings. It failed because we are greedy and selfish. Therefore, we do not subscribe to the Marxist idea of "from each according to his ability, to each according to his needs" no matter what the early Christians did. It doesn't work.

Socialism would demand the same selflessness required for communism. Properly defined, socialism is a system of social organization that advocates the vesting of the ownership and control of the means of production and distribution of capital and land in the government.

With the new Democratic Congress, advocates for government solutions for the problems of society have been brought into the national dialogue, e.g. Medicare for all, free college for all, etc.

"America will never be a social- etc. None of these dreamers have proposed that the government nationalize the means of production or ownership of land.

Since 2016, the popularity of the Democratic Socialists of America (the real ones) has grown from 5,000 members to 60,000. Polls show that many younger Americans think socialism is better than capitalism. But never fear. Greed is an impregnable barrier to common ownership.

Of course, all of this talk about socialism does not scare North Dakotans any more than a 60-mile wind blowing 10 inches of snow. We have two trophies that look like socialism - the North Dakota Mill and Elevator and the Bank of North Dakota. But they do not make North Dakota a socialist state

What is being proposed by the new left is not communism or socialism. It is within the context of being a national community in which we demonstrate our concern for each other and acknowledge that we are all in the U.S.A. together.

Our national community of concerns include defense (big military), care of nature (national parks and dams), a guaranteed retirement (social security), health care (Medicare and Medicaid) and scores of other services assumed at the national level, most of which were labelled as socialism at the outset.

They hardly rise to the level of socialism but are demonstrations of concerns as a community for the well-being of the nation and its people. Advocates of more government apparently feel that as a community we should create and expand services.

While a paradigm of communities for the national and state governments is difficult for some to grasp, the concept gets easier when we localize it. In fact, our counties, towns and churches function within the concept of community without thinking about it.

At the local level where we live, community building becomes more important, especially when it comes inclusion and exclusion. Because the United States is so big, we find it easy to exclude people we don't like at the national level. Every new immigration, from the Irish Catholics in the 1840s to the Chinese in 1924, has been hard to digest. However, we eventually accepted them in the national community.

So the new left proposals are not socialism but a matter of determining how far we want to go in building a national caring community. How much defense do we need? How much health care do we need? How much of nature should we preserve? How many immigrants can we handle?

Answers to these and other questions can be done as a caring national community without being either communist or socialist.

Legislative Report

A message from District 14 State Senator Jerry Klein

Its day 54 of the legislative session. As of today, March 27, there is still no agreement with the House as to what degree we will be funding our main priorities, which include long-term care and de-velopmentally disability providers, K-12 education, state employees and higher education. There has been movement, but those discussions continue as we move toward finalizing our budget for the biennium. It is necessary to remember, however, that this is North Dakota and not Washington, D.C., where we have to have a balanced budget before we go home.

Each session we set aside an hour for a memorial service where we honor former senators who have passed away during the last biennium. This week, we honored eight former senators during the ceremony, five of whom I knew and one whom I served with. I served with John Andrist of Crosby, who was here from 1992 until 2014. Another, Byron Langley, stepped down the year I was elected, and Stephen Farrington was the newspaper guy in Harvey when I first moved to Fessenden. Harry Iszler served from 1972-1982, and his farm later became home to our North Central Grasslands Research Center. Finally, there was Governor George Sinner, who not only served in the Senate but also in the House of Representatives prior to his governorship.

The service is always very well done, and helps us realize how precious our time is here on Earth, and our thanks to God for giving those individuals to serve the citizens of our state.

Gotta run, Jerry noted below.

On Lake Oahe, walleye abundance is very good right now. A lot of these fish are going to be on the smaller side, with that good reproductive success we have had in recent years. But we have been conducting annual sampling surveys on Oahe since 1968, and in 2018, we saw the fifth highest walleye abundance we have ever documented on Lake Oahe. Their size structure does leave a little bit to be desired right now. About 68 percent of the walleve in Lake Oahe are under 15 inches in size right now. Again, due to the good reproductive success we had in 2014, '15 and '16. Twenty seven percent of those fish are in that 15- to 20-inch range, and then 5 percent of those fish are over 20 inches. One of the things we are seeing on Lake Oahe right now is, those fish are so extraordinarily abundant that there are a few more of them out there than we really have groceries to sustain. So right now, anglers should not feel bad about harvesting some of these smaller fish, that will actually be doing us somewhat of a favor on Lake Oahe. Thin their numbers a little bit. There will be more groceries to go around for the rest of those fish and hopefully they will continue to grow into the more desirable sizes anglers like to see.

In the Missouri River (above Lake Oahe) we have got that strong 2014 year-class and a lot of those fish are now in that 14 up to 16-inch range. So we do see a little better size structure on the Missouri River, about 44 percent of those fish are now into that 15- to 20-inch range. We broke the state record walleye last year on the Missouri River, and in our sampling we are consistently seeing some trophy size walleye out there. Right now have no evidence to say that anglers under our present regulations are impacting the ability of the Missouri River and Lake Oahe to produce good numbers of fish over 20 inches.

Mister Muskrat

by Sarah Walker

November 15- On this day in 1922, one family took on a muskrat as their family pet.

It seems that George L. Hutchins, whose family lived near Hamilton, N.D., came across a muskrat while he was out driving late. The muskrat ran forward into the headlights, as if bewildered.

Hutchins got out, and struck the little animal over its head with the car's auto crank, knocking it out cold. He tossed it into the back of his car, and continued on his way.

When he got home, the muskrat had revived. It was walking around, happy as a muskrat.

Hutchins took it into the house, where his family grew to love it. They fed it milk and crackers and vegetables, and they filled their bathtub full of water for it to play in. The muskrat swam around in their tub, and tried to dive into it. It stayed tame, following members of the Hutchins family around.

The family dog did not like the muskrat as much as its owners seemed to. However, "in an encounter between the two, the dog came out second best."

The muskrat did not try to escape, and except for that first encounter with the auto crank, the Hutchins reported no need to restrain it. Mr. and Mrs. Hutchins said when they drove their car to town with the muskrat between them in the front seat, it sat there, happy, not trying to escape.

After a few days, the Hutchins family returned the tamed muskrat to the wild. They left it near the Tongue River in the woods. As they drove away, it sat by a tree, "taking a farewell look at them."

On a side note, striking any animal over the head and removing it from its habitat is generally frowned upon. Yet, in that time, one happy little muskrat joined a family for a short time only, easily tamed by a rap on the head.

News from around the state

by Merry Helm

November 16- On this day in 1894, Fessenden was getting itchy to take over the Wells County seat, which they'd taken away from Sykeston 10 days earlier. Sykeston lost the election fair and square, but things weren't moving fast enough for some; so a number of Fessenden residents took 20 wagons to Sykeston and forcibly took possession of the county's records.

Here's some other news and trivia from around the state during this period in 1911.

There were 53 Sundays that year, a very rare event. Experts reported that it wouldn't happen again for a hundred years. The 53rd Sunday fell on New Year's Eve, and it was suggested that all religious denominations celebrate it as a day of universal thanksgiving.

In Bottineau, five prisoners three robbers and two being held for grand larceny – escaped from jail 15 minutes after they returned to their cells after eating supper. This was the second time they had broken out that week.

In Kenmare, a pile of burning garbage got out of hand, and the fire department was brought out. When one of the firemen brought along a ladder, someone asked why he needed a ladder when the fire was on the ground. He said that to ring the fire bell, he had to move the ladder, and he decided to bring it along for company.

It was a record breaking year for crops, and per capita, North Dakota had the highest income in the nation, at $1,931. Thanks to tree claims, the state also had almost 96,000 acres of hand-planted forests, and nearly 1,000,000 acres was still available for homesteading. And while the population of the United States had increased 21% in the previous 10 years, North Dakota's population had increased a whopping 80%. The state also had the lowest death rate of any state in the Union.

The Hansboro newspaper reported the latest invention for the family home... the gum board. a board cut in a circle, either plain or decorated, and was designed to hang on the dining room wall. The name of each family member was painted around the edge to mark the spot where they could stick their gum until they wanted to chew it again. As it was reported in the paper, "This saves carrying the gum to bed, getting it in one's hair or swallowing it in the night."

Prairie Dog Velcro

April 1, 2019 - Today marks the day that genetic researcherturned entrepreneur Cy Ludovicianus started his ranch west of Betrugen in Dupér County. There he does not raise the usual cattle or horses - or even bison or emu. Instead he is raising prairie dogs. But these are bioengineered prairie dogs whose fur has been genetically modified to emulate the hooks and loops of - Velcro!

According to Dr. Cy, as he's called, he has engineered the males to have the Velcro hook fur and the females to have the loop type. One problem, so far, has been that the animals become fastened to each other during mating, The scientist says it's quite a sight to see them running around in tandem, but the fact that they can't get through their burrow entrances while, as he calls it "hooked up" has caused an increase in predation that is troublesome. Nonetheless, he hopes for a bright future for this newest North Dakota industry.

Happy April Fools Day!

Use caution during spring melt

With warmer temperatures and large amounts of snow melting across much of its service area. Otter Tail Power Company reminds customers and neighbors that electricity and water don't mix.

High water levels and flooded areas could increase the potential for accidental contact with electricity. Otter Tail Power Company's Safety Services Manager Greg Overland advises to stay away from water that may be in contact with any electrical component, such as a pad-mount transformer or a downed power line.

"That includes flooded basements," says Overland. "Don't go there if the water level has reached any part of the electrical system, such as electrical outlets or the electrical connections on water heaters, water softeners, heating systems, etc. Don't attempt to operate appliances or equipment with water-compromised electrical components without first having them evaluated by a qualified electrician."

Other safety tips:

• Don't use power tools or other electrical appliances in damp or wet areas.

 Don't even consider going near a downed power line.

• Don't connect a portable generator directly to your home's wiring and never plug it into a regular household outlet. If you must use a generator, ensure you have adequately sized power cords to support the electrical load and that your generator is properly grounded. Be sure to read and follow the manufacturer's other instructions for safely operating a portable generator.

Call Otter Tail Power Company's 800-257-4044 customer service number for advice or assistance if you must evacuate your home or business and don't know how to shut off your main breaker or fuse box.

A public safety official, which may include the mayor, incident commander, or fire chief, can disconnect power in an emergency. "If your home has been without electrical service, either at your request, public safety official order, or due to a flood-related power interruption, electrical codes may require an electrical inspector's wiring certificate before we can reenergize your home," says Overland. You can find more information at otpco. com/safety.

Overland also warns that high water levels could reduce power line clearances in some areas. He urges emergency responders to be especially alert when their work in flooded areas might put them in contact with energized electrical equipment including overhead lines, transformers, and substations.

"It's important that our employees, customers, and neighbors remain safe and able to do the things they want to do," adds Overland. "Without being hampered by an injury that could have been avoided."

Fessenden-Bowdon FFA wins State Agronomy CDE

Five members of the Fessenden-Bowdon FFA Chapter participated in the State FFA Agronomy Career Development Event held March 18 in Minot. Three of the individual members finished in the top five of the event and four in the top 10. Junior Levi Opdahl finished second overall missing the top spot by a mere point. His brother, Garin Opdahl, finished in third place while Nicole Neumiller tied for fifth overall. Alex Heilman, one of three freshmen on the team, finished with his best performance and an 8th place finish. Junior Colby Jones also had his personal best score and earned a gold award finishing 30th.

Having three members in the top five boded well for the chapter in the team competition as they earned the right to represent North Dakota at the National Agronomy Event in October in Indianapolis, Indiana. The team score of 3,208 was enough for the chapter members to claim the top spot over the other 64 competing chapters. There were 218 individual judgers in the agronomy event.

The state Agronomy event has students identify crop and weed seeds and plants in North Dakota as well as Insects, Agronomic Disorders, Machinery and Equipment. Grain grading, soil survey interpretation and seed selection. The team problem consists of calculating planting rate, fertilizer calculations and interpreting the North Dakota Weed Control Guide.

Fessenden-Bowdon was also represented in the state livestock judging event. All three chapter livestock judgers were in their first year of judging and improved immensely throughout the year. The team finished 32nd of 58 competing schools. Eighth grader Jadyn Mason led the team at state with a bronze award and a 96th of 188 judgers. Delaney Erfle, 7th grader, also earned bronze. Fellow 7th grader Ryan Snively narrowly missed an individual award.

Members in the livestock evaluation CDE judge two sets of beef, sheep and swine, and a class of market goats. Members must present a set of oral reasons on beef, sheep and swine, and interpret a keep/cull class and take a beef knowledge exam.

Christian Women's Luncheon

The Christian Women's Club of Harvey and the surrounding area will host a "What's Your Financial Future?" Luncheon on Monday, April 8, from noon to 1:30 p.m., at the Assembly of God Fellowship Hall, Harvey.

Election of precinct committeemen and other individuals will be held.

4-H is buzzing

by Leah Volochenko Club Reporter

Balfour Roughriders 4-H club was educated on honey and its importance in North Dakota. The club also participated in a survey for the N.D. Department of Agriculture. The survey was a honey taste test. The honey flavors tested were clover, wildflower, sunflower, and buckwheat.

The majority of the club members preferred the sweetness of the clover honey.

Fun fact: the flavor of honey changes depending on the flowers the honey bee pollinates.

For a fun activity, the kids made catapults of popsicle sticks, rubber bands, spoons, bottle tops, and hot glue. Marshmallows were then shot across the gym. Kaidence had the farthest and the highest catapult.
